This Standard Work on the Chinese Language, constructed on the basis of Kanghi's Imperial Dictionary, contains all Chinese characters in practical use, and while alphabetically arranged according to the sounds of the oldest dialect of China, the Cantonese, it gives also the Mandarin pronunciation of all characters explained in the book, so that its usefulness is by no means confined to the Cantonese Dialect, but the work is a practically complete Thesaurus of the whole Written Language of China, ancient and modern, as used all over the Empire, whilst its introductory chapters serve the purposes of a philological guide to the student.

A Supplement, arranged for being bound and used by itself, and containing a List of the Radicals, an Index, and a List of Surnames, will be published and sold separately.

HONGKONG, SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1884.

THE estimated revenue of the Colony of Hongkong during 1885 $1,212,188, being nearly fifty-three thousand dollars more than the probable revenue of the current year, as estimated at the present time. In 1883 the seventy-seven thousand dollars more Broadly stated, therefore, the Colony may hope to have a larger revenue next year than it will have during the current one, but a smaller revenue than was received in 1883. The estimated expenditure for 1885 is $1,160,305. beyond, vid Naples; to Saigon, Straits Having written so much about the Fees of Office... estimates laid on the table at the India (via Madras), the Australasian last meeting of the Legislative Council, very little more of interest can be interest penned about them, excepting in regard to one particular item-that of the Opium Monopoly. In other words the estimates, with the exception of this ATeither the Captain, the Agents, nor particular item, present the usual Owners will be Responsible for figures of expenditure under certain Crew of the following Vessels, during there being nothing special, nor any serious change, to be noted in the calculations.

Indeed, the estimates do not depart from the usual grooves so far as to include the estimated expenditure for extraordinary works, such as the Sewerage Scheme, the Water Supply and the connection of the East and West Prayas. It lies, it appears, been thought advisable to postpone the estimate for these extraordinary works until the next session of the Council, when the Surveyor General will be in a better nosition than he can be at present to prepare a statement of the amounts he will require for carrying ont such works. Money is of course being expended on the extraordinary works now in progress, such expenditure being covered by a balance of assets on the first of the present year of over a million dollars, but it is estimated that notwithstanding the expenditure now going on over extraordinary works there will probably be a balance of assets on the first January next of $659,402. This sum will, it is expected, suffice for the expenditure during 1885 on extraordinary works connected with munion every Sunday, except the 2nd and supply, so that it is not considered likely it will be necessary to Military Service. - Rev. H. W. Lee, B. A., raise the contemplated loan until towards the close of 1885. Included in the estimates, under Works and Buildings, we notice $50,000 for the new Central School; $15,000 for Police Boat Basin at Kowleon (final instalment); and $25,000 for draining and filling in the Wong-nei-chung Valley.

The only item in the estimates, therefore, which appears to call for special comment, is that of the Onium Monopoly. It is the item which main-Services for Seamen, on Sundays, at 7.30 venue during the present year. In 1883 the revenue from this source was $246,449. The estimate for the current year was $240,000, but the retotal revenue for the current twelvemonths will be only $183.369. Thus it will be more than $100,000 less than it was in 1883. The estimate under this hend for 1885 is $210,000, and the remark is added to the estimate: venue estimated may be collected on Opium Boiling during 1885.' We trust this hope will be fulfilled.

The Opinm revenue has no doubt got

nessy made the initial mistake in dealing with it when he forced up in a reckless way the amount paid for the monopoly by the old syndicate. If we remember rightly he drove up the price of the monopoly from about $150,000 to over $200,000. The result was that the monopolists began to devise schemes for getting out of the payment of this large sum. It struck them that if they boiled opium at Macao they could do it at a much cheaper rate. Had Sir John Pope Hennessy gone on raising the price of the monopoly, and there was no Macao in existence, the probability is that in time the farmers here would have found it cheaper to go to San Fran-cisco to boil their opium. Anyway the boiling of the opium at Macao was encouraged, and we now appear to be suffering on that account. The scheme on which the monopoly is at present worked is the same as that in existence during Sir John Pope Hennessy's time, excepting that the Government issues the licenses instead of granting the monopoly of their issue to a syndicate of Chinese. A payment of $25 per month is ninde for each license, and $2.25 for each ball of opium prepared. Not only has forcing up the cost of preparing opium here, and, perhaps, the taking over by the Government of the licensing, encouraged the boiling of the opium elsewhere, but the export must also have decreased very sensibly owing to the tax on the drug having been doubled at San Francisco; and the emigration of Chinese to California and Australia-the two markets for the boiled opium-having been practically stopped. The Government cannot of course prevent opium from being boiled at Macao, nor is the Macao Government likely to come to our aid in the matter so long as it can gain an increased revenue through this altered state of affairs. More opium is also now probably boiled here and exported surreptitionsly than formerly, as the old monopolists kept up a considerable staff of detective officers, who, in addition to their fixed salaries, had a portion of the confiscated opium as prize money to encourage them in their work, It was within the power and to the interests of a small syndicate of monopolists to keep up a detective system to prevent WILHELM TYERREN, chief engineer, aged 40 secret boiling, but it is not to the interests, or in the power of a number of small licensees to continue such a system. So The publication of this issue commenced much of the trade has gone to Macao, that the steamers of one firm are, we hear, supplied from that port with about $100,000 worth of opium per annum. We should be able to compete on very favourable terms with Macao over this industry—if it can be called an industry-for the reason alone that the opium has to be taken hence to Macao, and in most instances, we presume brought back here again. It is stated that the Government has a scheme under consideration for securing the opium revenue for the future, and this no doubt accounts for the hopeful revenue was $1,289,148, which is about remarks added to the item in the estimates. The following is an abstract than the estimated revenue next year. of the estimated revenue for 1885 :--

Sig. - A number of persons, amongst the number, assemble every Wednesday evening outside the rails of the officers' mess, to hear the excellent music of the Buffa' band. The concert usually lasts about three hours, and the proof of its popularity is evidenced weekly. One unfortunate drawback, however, mars its thorough enjoyment, and that is the absence of any seating accommodation. The Parade and Cricket Grounds offer sites of security from vehicular and other traffic, and if some enterprising individual were permitted to provide chairs, especially long ones, or hire there. I am sure they would be eagerly taken up. About 10 cents a chair ought to pay very well. Let us hope some one will point out the chance to any speculating chair maker, who will get the-I presume-requisite permission to plant chairs about the Parade and Cricket Grounds. > Whatever may be the outcome of the Rain..... Conference, and the grave and difficult questions yet unsolved that may crop up in it, on one thing all parties in England seem to have made up their minds. Other great nations may go to war amongst themselves, but they will never go to war with us, nor we with them. It is well to have an army, and well to have a navy; both are useful from time to time in the little ware that will arise in or upon the borders of an empire so vast as ours ; but a war in Europe is so shocking to contemplate that it is really better not to acknowledge it, by any means, as in the least degree likely to hap-This feeling it . is, we suppose, together with the determination of both parties, when they are in power, to avoid the imputation of spending an extra pound on armaments, which accoun for such scenes as were witnessed in bignously about the Conference. audience numbering less than two dozen members, and including not a single representative of the Government of Cabinet rank, the few naval experts in the House of Commone uttored the familiar lament about the weakness of the British navy. It is not, our purpose to go into the details of such a discussion once again. We have written of the subject often enough before, and the recent debate was in no respect greatly different from those which have preceded it. As usual, figures and measurements and rates of progress and tables of statistics were bandied backwards and forwards, in a most admired confusion of authorities. But if there is endless dispute about details there are certain conclusions in which all the non-official critics agree, which even the official apologists cannot with any force dispute. There are not two naval Powers: only in the world: now, but half a dozen; and it is abundantly plain that any one of several possible combinations among these would array against us fleets equal or superior to our own. Specially clear is our relation to the most powerful of these nations. There may be a difficulty in setting forth the exact comparison between the rate of increase in our navy and in that of Franco, as was again illustrated the other night. But even Mr Campbell-Bannerman did not deny what nearly all who have spoken and written on the subject have afirmed namely, that the French navy is increasing at a more rapid rate than our own. We may leave the experis to settle the exact trae if they can. It is enough and more than enough to know that, relatively -- considering much from the Treasury : and which those same administrators when they are independont strive in vain to bring to the notice employ of Peng Yil-lin and had been order- of a public and a Legislature resolved to ed to proceed to Peking with memorials care nothing about the matter. JOHN BULL AND HIS ISLAND. XVIII.

THE PRENCH COLONY—PRENCH SOCIETIES. There are about thirty thousand French people established in England, and the number is increasing every day.

Twenty years ago-not more-our compatriots living in this great city knew little or nothing of one another. It was sufficient to announce yourself as

French to have the door of the French Embassy closed in your face. Every man is more or less wary in a foreign land. When he is on the Continent. the Englishman shuns his compatriots-at least he does not seek their acquaintance. Who are they at home? he says to himself. This feeling no longer exists in London among the French colony, now large, industrious, compact and united. Besides the French Benevolent Society. the French Hospital, and several associations of more or less importance, in 1880 there was founded in London a French National Society, reckoning at the present time nearly a thousand members. · I extract the following from its statutes :-The growing importance of the French colony in London, the large interests represented by it, have created the desire for an organisation capable of uniting its various elements and binding them together into a compact whole, and of keeping alive among its members the exalted sentiments of patriotism and humanity.

I. A society for the benefit of the French residing in England has been formed and denominated the "Societe Nationalo known to each other; and its general aim a brilliant future for this interesting associis to defend the interest of the colony and ation. to study philosophical and moral questions. III. What cannot be done individually can be done collectively. ones protected by this association. remembrance of the mother-country, too profit of both France and England. soon forgotten in this land where every one lives for himself and to himself. The French National Society gives frequent entertainments, sometimes a ball, at other times a concert or a dramatic performance. These social gatherings make those who join in them forget that they are in exile, an exile none the less sad for being voluntary.

They are in France once more in the spirit. Let us hope, however, that they will not be too exclusive, but that they will continue to study our good neighbours, the English. Many French people in England carry their horror of everything English to a ridiculous extent. I know one who has lived nearly twenty years in this country, but who boasts of not knowing a word of English. I know others who, on the contrary, delight in disparaging our dear country whonever they have an occasion; who have altered their names to make them appear more English, and whose only regret is that they have not red whiskers.

Both courses are equally to be avoided. The mission of the French who live in England is a double one : it should be theirs to make France known to the English, who, with the exception of some who tra- the Mast Head of the Man-of-War. know it not; they have also to make []. Some ask me to use my private authority, and take vigorous proceedings against a defaulting debter or a swindler : others call upon me to restore a missing wife, husband, daughter or son, just as if had a brigade of policemen at hand to collar them, and put them on board the French boat by force, without any more ado.
